Latest Wine Investment Press Coverage

There has been considerable press comments regarding wines, their investment potential and the recovery in prices. To some extent all of these articles are true, however, as with all press commentary they need to create interest and comment arising from their articles. This unfortunately can lead to misguided or miss-informed opinions - they need to make the articles spiky to ensure a loyal readership.

The two attached articles exemplify the best and worst of this issue. The first by 'The Drinks Business' accurately explains that part of the recovery in prices is related to the 'Lafite' effect. Whereas the article from the Sunday Times would lead one to believe that all wines are recovering at the same dramatic rate as Lafite.

It is therefore prudent to apply caution to these articles and not draw instant conclusions from them. There is a gradual and general rise in prices across the universe of investment wines, however, it is mixed and confined currently to a relatively small number. Similarly, the results from Liv-ex are do not necessarily relate to the whole wine market.

Fine wine market: the worst is behind us

Patrick Schmitt, The Drinks business, 17.09.2009

One year ago this week the world watched as investment banking firm Lehman Brothers collapsed, marking the largest bankruptcy ever in the US and the start of a dash for cash which hit the most liquid and highest value fine wines first.

Where the wealthy are investing their money

Melanie Wright, The Sunday Times 20.09.2009

Wine, rare coins and Guinness memorabilia: alternative investments, for the cautious or less financial solvent, are booming.
