Latest Wine Investment Press Coverage

We have attached another article extolling the virtues of investing in wine. This article is primarily related to direct investment into wine. Our observations on this article are summarised as follows:

- No where does the article express the key element of selection – the vintage
- The article states (not sure on their figures) that merchants charge typically 10%, yet go on to suggest you can cut out the middle man and go to an auction house. The costs at an auction house are typically 15% plus VAT
- It is stated that only a handful of wines fell in value – the Liv-ex Index fell by 18% plus during the period and this included more than a handful of wines
- The author states that one should always consult an independent financial advisor – based on our detailed contact with IFAs not all have sufficient knowledge to advise on this asset class
- Investors from the Far East are not new – we have been purchasing from our group for some 18 years We trust these observations will assist in helping with the article.

How to invest in wine

The Liv-ex 100 index, the index which tracks the world's most sought after wines, is up 10pc this year – although it is down 20pc over the past 12 months. Click here to read full Telegraph Article
